Great Volcanic Fruption on the Sandwich Islands-Total Destruction of

By way of the San Francisco Herold, Honolula dates to the 12th of February are received. A terrific volcanic eruption had taken place on Manua Loa. January 23rd the whole mountain and surrounding atmosphere were lighted up, and on the 26th the sight is described as one of the most awfully sublime scenes ever witnessed. A person who visited the scene of the eruption gives the Honofula Adverciser a long account of the state of the country and appearance of the of the country and appearance of the

We quote:On the afternoon of our arrival at the camping ground, a new stream starting some few miles below the crater, which had evidently been dammed up by some obstruction, came rushing down with tremendous noise and fury through the WEARE NOW PREPARED to EXEthick jungle which lay in its track, burnang the crackling trees, and sending up for a time a thick smoke almost as dens as that from the crater. This stream, from the time it broke away from its embankment, moved along two miles an hour till it reached the vicinity of our camp, when its progress was checked, and it moved not more than a quarter of a mile an hour. But it formed a grand sight. Here was a stream of lava running over the plain, twenty to twenty five feet in height, and an eight of a mile in width, shough its width varied a great deal. It was a mass or pile of red-hot stones, resembling a pile of coals on fire, borne along by the liquid lava stream under-As it moved slowly along, large red boulders would roll down the sides, breaking into a thousand small stones, crashing and burning the trees which lay in the track.

It is impossible to give a true concepvion of the immense force and power of this lava stream, bearing along, as it does, an almost inconceivable mass. It reminds us most vividty of the breaking up of the ice in a large river, only the imagination must stretch the comparison, and suppose the ice piled up thirty teet, and thus borne along by the current beneath, the whole width of the river moving at the same time, crashing, and breaking, and piling up cones and irregular masses on top -But even this comparison is far below the reality; to be conceived it must be seen. It is proposed by some te nominate a person who has no positive qualities to boast, a man who will unite the party upon something like a non entity, who, if he has any principles at all, has so little confidence in them himself as never to contend for them or put himself personally politically in any peril to defend them. He must be an adroit mousee in order to be available; a kind of political sneak who in times of peril you cannot tell whether he is with you or against you, but when the battle is over is always on good terms with the dominant party. We have lots of just such dominant party. We have lots of just such Democrats in this State. They are legitimate descendants of the ancient Tories .-You can know them by their everlasting, the name of some well-known and responeronkings about "policy," and "availability They care nothing about the triumph of principles, they look only to the triumph of They are shysters, cowards, and political tricksters, a curse to the party and a disgrace to the Democracy. This monotonous life is occasionally brok-lines to drive our horses.

The men said that the negro had started to run away, and be had caught him and brought him back. The negro said that he belonged to a man a few miles south, and that they had the ropes on the wrong man, for the negro was much the smartest looking of the two.

Last Sunday, just after morning services, we heard a great noise in the street, and looking out we saw a black man trying to get away from two whate men. His face was cut and bleeding profusely. They tied his hands behind him, stripped his back bare took him into their store which is near-AN IMPOSTURE EXPOSED,-The imposture ly opposite to our house, tied him down to the floor, and gave hun fifty lashes in the course of the next half hour-not all at once. After eight or ten lashes he groaned most piteously at every stroke of the whip. Aud il the crime that we could learn that he had committed was to prevent the black nurse from taking a whistle which he had bought and given to his boy, and giving it to his master's boy. The slave and nurse were quarreling about it when the master came home from church. He came into broke it over the slave's head, then struck him a blow with the rolling-pin. The slave rushed into the street, and the noise began

And this is life in the South. Here is Southern chilvalry, the aristocracy of America, the constituency of a Butler and a Brooks. But give me my Northern home, however humble. I would a most rather be anything (except a doughface) in the free North, than to be a mistress of the best plantation in South Carolina.
